

NORWAY STOP KILLING WHALES !

Every year, Norway announces that it will again open its controversial commercial whaling season (5 months starting in April).

And every year it sets its self appointed quota of 1052 Minke whales that it will slaughter despite international opposition.

Norway resumed commercial whaling in 1993 after switching to 'research' when the IWC ban on commercial whaling was introduced in 1986. Norway has killed around 8,000 whales since commercial whaling was banned in 1986.

The International Whaling Commission has called repeatedly on Norway to respect the whaling ban but in May 2004, the norwegian Parliament passed a resolution to considerably increase the number of Minkes hunted each year.

In 2007, Norwegian whalers killed 592 minke whales and most of the animals killed were the larger, and therefore more profitable, female minke whales, often pregnant.

NORWAY STOP KILLING WHALES !

Every year, Norway announces that it will again open its controversial commercial whaling season (5 months starting in April).

And every year it sets its self appointed quota of 1052 Minke whales that it will slaughter despite international opposition.

Norway resumed commercial whaling in 1993 after switching to 'research' when the IWC ban on commercial whaling was introduced in 1986. Norway has killed around 8,000 whales since commercial whaling was banned in 1986.

The International Whaling Commission has called repeatedly on Norway to respect the whaling ban but in May 2004, the norwegian Parliament passed a resolution to considerably increase the number of Minkes hunted each year.

In 2007, Norwegian whalers killed 592 minke whales and most of the animals killed were the larger, and therefore more profitable, female minke whales, often pregnant.